

A criminal charge of trespass alleges that the defendant entered or remained in a home, building, boat, or enclosed land of another person after having been forbidden to do so (either directly or by means of a posted notice). A conviction potentially is punishable by up to 30 days in jail.