

A criminal charge of possession of a controlled substance alleges that the defendant knowingly or intentionally possessed a specified controlled substance, unless the defendant had a valid prescription. Jail sentences vary depending on the particular substance.